Kate Beckinsale

Top LA plastic and reconstructive surgeon Dr Leslie Stevens (who has not treated any of these stars) says the Underworld actress, 43, may not exhibit obvious evidence of surgery, but "I do think that her lips may be slightly fuller. She does look leaner, which could be attributed to ageing and deflation of the face." Vartanian adds, "I use strategic and careful placement of facial fillers to blunt or reverse aspects of facial ageing in a natural and undetectable way. She may be benefitting from similar restorative, subtle procedures."

Pamela Anderson

The Baywatch star and PETA spokeswoman, who turns 50 on July 1, turned heads at the Cannes Film Festival on May 20 when she appeared with light makeup, pulled-back hair and a full-length black Vivienne Westwood gown. But was her look purely the result of minimalist red-carpet styling? According to Stevens, "Pamela is pushing 50 years old. She looks fantastic—perhaps too fantastic without having a facelift of some form or another." He believes her lips are "definitely injected."

Ariel Winter

The Modern Family star wrote an online essay last year about her breast-reduction surgery. "Having so much weight on my frame was affecting me psychologically," said Winter, now 19. "I was uncomfortable and unhappy. I chose surgery because of how I felt, not because of what anyone else thought." Leading Los Angeles-based facial plastic surgeon Dr A. John Vartanian (who has not treated any of these stars) says, "lip enhancement, combined with good makeup, along with her natural weight loss, all better match her petite frame."

Nicole Scherzinger

The singer, 38, rose to fame as the lead singer in the Pussycat Dolls and reprised her role as a judge on 2016's The X Factor UK. Asked by The Sun if she would use Botox like her fellow judge Simon Cowell, Scherzinger said, "It's about drinking a lot of water and getting a lot of sleep. It's crazy what hot yoga or going on an amazing run will do. Anybody can et that stuff done, but for me how I feel inside is a true reflection." Stevens says while Nicole has a leaner face, "which can be fact of ageing," she also "appears to have fuller lips [and] eyebrows that are more arched laterally."

Calista Flockhart

The Supergirl star, 52, "has had plenty of filler, particularly in the cheeks," says Stevens. "Surgery is not so obvious, but if she did have surgery, such as a facelift or necklift, it must have been some time ago as her neck bands are visible in the photo on the right. Surgery would have corrected this, albeit not permanently."

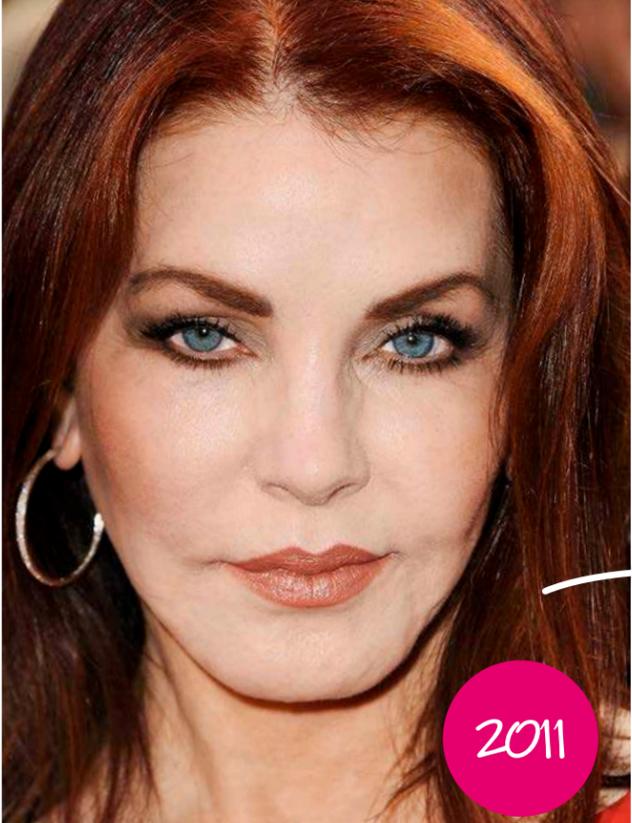

Courtney Love

Stevens says the rocker and actress, 52, looked her best in 1996. "She now has way too much cheek fullness, more than she had in the photo on the far left when she was younger. Too much work and too much filler," Stevens adds. "People have to accept the fact that some ageing is part of your life. You cannot be or look 28 forever."

Priscilla Presley

A rep for the actress said that in 2008 she was a victim of a botched procedure from a faux facialist. "An investigation, which uncovered his misconduct, ultimately led to his imprisonment... Ms Presley dealt with this matter years ago and everything is now well," the rep explained. In the more recent photo, Presley, 72, looks as though she may have had "too much filler placed in the mid-cheek area," says Vartanian, "resulting in an unnatural and 'plastic-y' look that is a big no-no in my practice."

Rodrigo Alves

The UK reality star, 33, has lived up to his Human Ken Doll nickname by logging in more than 57 cosmetic surgeries, an obsession that began as a teen. In April, he told In Touch magazine that he estimated he has spent more than $697,000 going under the knife and while docs may cut him a deal, "Nothing is free in this life."

Kimora Lee Simmons

The model and fashion mogul, 42, now married to banker Tim Leissner, has had "way, way too much filler in the cheeks," says Stevens. "It is even distorting in (her) smile - be careful of the pillow face!" When this happens, Vartanian explains, "the remedy is to either melt the filler with another dissolving medicine and start fresh, or just stop adding cheek volume for a while to allow the filler to dissipate."

Kendall Jenner

After Kylie Jenner posted a makeup session with her older sister in November, people speculated Kendall, 21, had work done. She was quick to respond, "As a model, why would I have my face reconstructed? It doesn't even make sense." However, Stevens still reckons Jenner had her lips injected and had a nose job. "The work looks good from this angle. With her getting older, her face is leaning out, which complements her [look] well."

Khloé Kardashian
 On Cocktails with Khloé on March 2016, the reality star said about a rumoured nose job, "I swear I haven't," but added that she had tried but wasn't happy with fillers. "I looked crazy and I still think the effects are in there," she said. Stevens says that while Kardashian, 32, "most likely had a rhinoplasty," her lips "are way too over-injected. One starts with a little filler, gets used to it and then asks for more, gets used to it and asks for more and so on and so forth until the 'trout pout' happens."

THINGS TO CONSIDER

EXPERTS WEIGH IN ON THE BEST WAY TO FACE TREATMENTS

According to the experts contacted by WHO, any number of celebrities and non-celebrities seek help to look their best. Our advice? Try to go about it in a smart way. "Patients should ask about realistic expectations from surgery and they should also ask about realistic expectations for recovery time, such as the after-care needed or time before they can return to work or school," says New York plastic surgeon David Shafer, a contributor to online surgery resource RealSelf. "Patients should feel comfortable talking with their surgeon and the office staff."

Other factors to consider are age, weight and skincare. "In general, weight loss can negatively influence facial ageing by promoting a thinner, more gaunt face," says Dr A. John Vartanian, who adds that any Botox or facial filler injections should be done "in a complementary way." Dr Leslie Stevens agrees, saying, "Significant weight loss could affect surgical results. For example, after a facelift, if one loses a lot of weight, this could make the jowls hang again or cause laxity to the neck."

Another thing to consider is how procedures can affect your beauty routine. Cheek fillers, for example, "help lift and fill missing volume, making makeup tricks less necessary," says Shafer. "Some patients come with so much makeup caked on because they are trying to cover irregularities in their skin. Often we can prescribe home skincare regimens and in-office procedures to improve skin texture so less or no makeup is necessary."

Stevens says patients should also thoroughly investigate any doctor or surgery. "Facelifting certainly turns back the clock," he says, "but making someone look different and 'done' is unacceptable."

Bella Hadid

The It-girl model and younger sister of Gigi Hadid has the right look to become an ambassador for luxury brands such as Dior Beauty and Bulgari. "Bella obviously has had a rhinoplasty," says Stevens. "Compared to the earlier photo, her nasal tip has elevated/rotated and been refined." With her hair and makeup on-point as well, "I think the result is excellent," Stevens adds. "What else could a 20-year-old need or have had? Not much."

Marnie Simpson
 The pout on the Geordie Shore wild child, 24, is part pose and part lip injections, suspects Stevens. Sydney dermal-filler specialist Linda Dayan, who has not treated Simpson, agrees: "Her lips look significantly larger, especially the bottom lip. My guess is a small amount of dermal lip filler."

Lindsay Lohan

In April 2016, the Mean Girls star, 30, posted a picture of herself receiving CACI treatment, which uses electric currents to stimulate muscles under the skin for a non-surgical facelift. "Pain-free and relaxing with cooling facial after," she enthused. While Dayan, who has not treated Lohan, says "she may have actually laid off her use of lip fillers," Stevens says surgery isn't what has changed Lohan's looks. "What we are seeing on her is a few years of hard living that has caught up to her," he says. "Lifestyle is very important in keeping ageing at bay."
